ATTACHMENT FOCUSED THERAPY IN FAMILIES IMPACTED BY ABUSE AND NEGLECT

Based on the work of Dan Hughes

Children who have been neglected and/or abused often have issues that are difficult to treat. Many times these children have had a series of unsuccessful foster homes, group homes, and placements that have led to attachment difficulties. When they do find adoptive parents who are eager to provide a permanent home for them or even adopt them, these children are often unable to accept the very thing they need the most; love and guidance from caring adults who want them to do well in life. This frequently leads to frustration and disappointment for the adoptive parents as they expected to have grateful children who appreciate the love and care that they are now being given. When this doesn't happen, both parents and children sometimes give up and the opportunities for these children to heal and learn how to accept and give love are reduced. This workshop looks at the techniques of international trainer Dan Hughes that have shown to be very effective in working with this population. Dan has spent over 30 years developing his treatment model and he now trains professionals in the US and in several countries abroad. This interactive workshop will provide an overview of Dan's model, a discussion about integrating attachment and systems theory, active role plays with participants, and the opportunity to discuss specific cases.

Workshop Objectives:

Professionals who attend this seminar will have a better understanding of:

- Integrating Attachment and Systems Theory
- Assessing for attachment difficulties
- Working with foster/adopted children
- Working with children who have been abused and neglected
- Working with foster/adoptive parents
- Dan Hughes' model of therapy
